

The price of honesty!

Scenarios

Scenario 1

You found a purse or wallet full of money in a public place. What would you do? Is it okay to keep it or should you try to find the owner? What is the right thing to do?

Scenario 2

You said you lost your phone to get money from insurance, but you didn't really lose it. How would you feel if someone did this to your family or a local shop to get money by lying? What could happen if people make false claims like this? Why is it wrong?

Scenario 3

You want to get a job in a local shop, so you say you've worked in customer service before, even though you haven't. How could this affect your chances in future jobs? Would this impact the trust between you and your employer?

Scenario 4

You bought something and later said it was broken, but it wasn't, just to get your money back. How could this hurt the shop and other customers? What problems can happen if you lie and make false claims like this?