

An interrailing adventure

Scenario cards

LONDON (UK)

You'll be travelling through France and Germany to get to your destination in Poland.

You're waiting for your first train, from London to Paris, and your passport drops onto the tracks.

- What do you need to consider or do in this situation?
- How might this be the same or different if it happened later in your journey, in another country?

PARIS (FRANCE)

You were due to travel through Germany, getting a train to Cologne, but the main line from Paris to Cologne is blocked. You have to travel via Belgium to continue your journey.

- What would it be important to find out about travelling by train in this country?
- How could you find this information?

BRUSSELS (BELGIUM)

You've got time to spare in Brussels before the next train, so you go exploring in the city. You notice metal tracks and white lines on the road, and you can hear a bell ringing.

- What is it and what should you do?
- Some people are starting to cross between the tracks — what should you do?

COLOGNE (GERMANY)

You're staying overnight in Cologne, before continuing your journey across Germany tomorrow. On the way to the youth hostel, you spot a car broken down on a level crossing.

- What do you do?
- What do you need to consider or do in this situation?
- How is this the same or different from the UK?

BERLIN (GERMANY)

You're now on the train from Berlin to Warsaw, and the train is entering Poland. Your friend is excited and wants to take a photo - they think they can see a village with traditional red roofs and a river in the distance. They want to lean out of the window to get a better view.

- What do you do?
- How might peer pressure affect what people do around trains?
- Have you ever seen someone break safety rules around trains? How did it make you feel, and what would you do in that situation?

WARSAW (POLAND)

You've arrived safely in Poland and settled into the campsite. While walking as a group to an off-site activity, you come across a level crossing. There's a half barrier down and flashing lights. Locals cross casually. You're tired, excited, and behind schedule.

- What do you need to consider or do in this situation?
- How do you know if it's safe to cross? Would you cross? Why or why not?
- How is this the same or different from the UK?
- How might peer pressure or the actions of locals influence you?
