

Risky or Not Risky activity: Game scenarios

Print out the scenarios below, then cut them out. Make sure there's enough for one set of cards per pair or group. Each separate set needs to be identifiable, such as being printed on different coloured paper or having a coloured dot on each one.

Writing your homework	Balancing on a tightrope	Carving a pumpkin with a knife	Going crate stacking with Scouts	Walking on a frozen pond

Reading a book on the beach	Seeing an unattended campfire while on a walk	Crossing the road outside school without looking	Using power tools without adult supervision	Going den building with a friend and their family

Buying loot boxes on video games	Betting money on sports	Getting lost in a big shopping centre	Playing football in the park	Visiting the cinema

Risky or Not Risky activity: Game scenarios

Print out the scenarios below, then cut them out. Make sure there's enough for one set of cards per pair or group. Each separate set needs to be identifiable, such as being printed on different coloured paper or having a coloured dot on each one.

Daniel loves to play FIFA on his games console. He's planning on buying lots of player packs, until he gets the best team possible.	Sally's favourite Youtuber has announced a prize draw. It costs £5 to enter and you can win a PlayStation. She really wants to take part.	Ali has noticed that his brother's going to the betting shop more and more. Ali recently caught his brother take money out of their mum's handbag.
John's best friend is mad about football and asked to borrow £50 from John to bet on his favourite team. He promised to give the money back in a few days' time. Should John lend him the money?	Debra was advertised a free casino-style game on her phone. She has been playing it constantly. She has won lots of virtual coins, so is now considering trying the actual slots game. She feels confident in winning actual money.	Chan has an important piece of work due in tomorrow at school, but he hasn't finished it yet. However, his favourite online game has just announced a surprise event happening tonight. There'll be special limited edition give aways, including skin bundles, points and special armour, which are only available tonight. Should he play or do his work?